(57) Abstract :

The proposed invention is a plant-mediated method for the synthesis of biogenic nanomaterials and an optimization method thereof. The method involves the use of plant extracts as reducing agents and stabilizers to synthesize biogenic nanomaterials, such as silver nanoparticles, gold nanoparticles, and iron oxide nanoparticles. The plant-mediated synthesis of biogenic nanomaterials is simple, cost-effective, eco-friendly, and scalable, making it a promising alternative to conventional chemical methods. The optimization method described in the invention enables the control of the size, shape, and stability of the biogenic nanoparticles by adjusting the reaction parameters, such as temperature, pH, concentration, and reaction time. The optimized synthesis of biogenic nanomaterials using the plant-mediated method has potential applications in various fields, such as medicine, biotechnology, electronics, and agriculture, and can contribute to the development of sustainable and green technologies.

AVISHKAR COLLEGE LEVEL RESEARCH PROJECT COMPETITION-2022-23

As per the guideline from Savitribai Phule Pune University college level research project competition organized on 19th September -2022, very warm response from undergraduate and postgraduate students. There are 12 research projects from undergraduate and 05 from post graduate level participated in the college level competition. There are 55 students actively participated to present their research work through this platform. The research projects were examined by the Dr. R. D. Borse (Botany), Dr. B. N. Navale (Hindi). Three undergraduate and one from post graduate level research projects were selected for zonal level competition. Participants were issued a certificate of participation.

Abstract of the Selected Research Project for Zonal level Avishkar Research Project Competition:

S. Y. B.Sc. Students Presented a “Digitalization of Medicinal Plants Formation” research project at College Level Avishkar Research Project Competition-2022 on 19th September - 2022.

Rapid Development of information technology today has winded the use of computer as well as mobile phones. The current study aims to discover effects of QR codes implementation on medicinal plants learning. The finding of the study responses revealed that the QR codes facilitate the learning of medicinal plants whereby the mean from this analysis majority of students find the learning approach is easy to be employed.

Abstract of the Selected Research Project for Zonal level Avishkar Research Project Competition:

M. Sc.-I Analytical Chemistry Students Presented a “Ecofriendly Sanitizer Preparation Method” research project at College Level Avishkar Research Project Competition-2022 on 19th September -2022.

The potential of some of the natural detergents and sanitizing agents as eco-friendly alternatives to petrochemical-based soaps and alcohol-based hand rubs for hand hygiene are discussed. The market of soaps and hand sanitizers is expected to grow in the coming years and therefore, future research should be directed to develop eco-friendly soaps and hand sanitizers for human and environmental safety.

Abstract of the Selected Research Project for Zonal level Avishkar Research Project Competition:

T.Y.BCom. students demonstrate “Drone Business Development Plan in India” research project at College Level Avishkar Research Project Competition-2022 on 19th September - 2022.

Unmanned aircraft systems, commonly known as drones, are becoming increasingly popular in modern logistics operations. Delivery drones transport medicines, parcels, groceries, food, and other homecare products. These drone delivery operations are gaining widespread importance in last-mile delivery given their accuracy, environment-friendly operations, shorter delivery time, and lower operational cost than traditional delivery channels.

“Chemistry Journal Club” (2022-23)

Traditionally, in many universities, student groups that promote critical and informative discussion are organized, aiming to debate themes from scientific articles and recent advances. Such groups are usually called Journal Clubs. Their aim is to provide the tools for both successful presentations and for comprehension/critical analysis of scientific publications, In order to use them in their own research and/or in the classrooms. In order to this College has start the Chemistry Journal Club Activity from the academic year 2022-23 for the PG students.

In order to get proper understanding and concept of Journal Club Activity, we have conducted the “Expert Lecture” on 24th – April -2023 in Seminar hall at 11a.m. For this programme we have invited resource persons Prof. Dr. P. M. Dongre, Director, Research Pravara Rural Education Society.

ABSTRACT

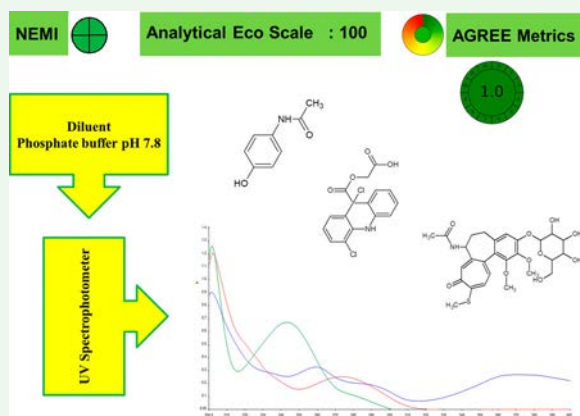

The present paper describes multicomponent UV spectrophotometric method for the determination of paracetamol, aceclofenac, and thiocolchicoside based on the fundamentals of green analytical chemistry. Major pharmaceutical companies and research laboratories encompass on green analytical methodologies for developing environmental friendly analytical methods. The present work is based on the principle of simultaneous equation involving additive of absorbances at the selected wavelengths. The linear range was established between 5–15 µg/mL for paracetamol, 1–5 µg/mL for aceclofenac, and 1–5 µg/mL thiocolchicoside. The greenness profile of the developed UV spectrophotometric technique was evaluated using National Environmental Methods Index, Analytical Eco-scale and AGREE metrics which proved the greenness of the method with respect to solvent, chemicals, energy consumed, and waste produced. The proposed method being simple, economical, and eco-friendly could be convenient substitutes for the use of hazardous chemicals in the routine investigation of the selected triple drug combination.

1. Introduction

The basic principle of the green analytical chemistry involves the replacement of hazardous solvents and chemicals. The 12 basic ethics of green chemistry recommended by Galuszka et al. aim to replace toxic solvents with greener alternatives which are highly environmental friendly (1). The approach to develop green UV spectrophotometric method is to minimize the consumption of organic solvent which in turn reduces the production of organic waste. This can be achieved by replacing solvents such as methanol, acetonitrile, and so on with less hazardous chemicals.

Paracetamol (PCM) (Figure 1a), chemically N-(4-hydroxyphenyl) acetamide, is a non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drug (NSAID) with antipyretic and analgesic action (2, 3). It is used in the treatment of reducing the elevated body temperatures. It is listed in Pharmacopoeia's of India, the USA and the UK (4–6). Aceclofenac (ACE) (Figure 1b), chemically, 2-[2-[(2, 6-dichlorophenyl) amino] phenyl] acetyl] oxyacetic acid, is an NSAID to relieve pain and inflammations (2, 3). It is listed in Pharmacopoeia's

ABSTRACT

Two simple, accurate, precise, sensitive, and pH-selective visible spectrophotometric methods have been developed and validated for the direct estimation of iron(III) in pure form, leaves, and pharmaceuticals using salicylic acid (SCA) as a chromogenic agent. The methods are based on complexation reaction between iron(III) and SCA at pH 2.26 (± 0.02) (Method A) and 6.1 (± 0.02) (Method B) to yield chromogens with maximum absorption at 520 and 460 nm, respectively. Various factors to yield maximum absorption and sensitivity have been studied and optimized. In both the methods, the absorbance was found to increase linearly with iron(III) concentration as shown by the correlation coefficient (r) of 0.9999 and 0.9988 for Method A and Method B, respectively. The calibration graphs are linear over the concentration ranges of 3.75-37.5 and 2.0-24.0 $\mu\text{g mL}^{-1}$ in method A and method B, respectively, with apparent molar absorptivity values of 1.71×10^3 and $3.01 \times 10^3 \text{ L mol}^{-1} \text{ cm}^{-1}$. The stoichiometry between iron(III) and SCA was found as 1:1 and 1:4 in Method A and Method B, respectively. The methods were validated as per the current ICH guidelines. The methods developed were successfully applied to determine iron(III) in curry and drumstick leaves, mustard seeds, and pharmaceuticals. The effect of interferents such as cations, anions, and other organic substances was also studied.

Key words: Iron(III), Salicylic acid, pH-selective, Method development and validation.

1. INTRODUCTION

Iron is the most wide-spread transition metal found in the living system. It is most commonly found in the form of oxides and hydroxides. To enable the uptake of iron by plants, it is sometimes necessary to mark the iron in an organic complex. In the body of mammals, iron is stored as iron(III) hydroxide particles surrounded by proteinaceous coat, known as ferritin. Iron is transported through the blood stream via transferrins. Iron is a very essential nutrient for human as well as animals. Therefore, consumption of iron-rich food is very pivotal.

Different workers have worked to develop analytical methods to determine iron(III) using several complexing agents, and these include study of kinetics of formation of bidentate monocomplexes of iron(III) with salicylic acid (SCA), sulfosalicylic acid, 8-hydroxyquinoline and salicylaldehyde with possible mechanism [1], bidentate ligands forming six-membered chelate rings with malonic acid n-buty malonic, benzylmalonic and cyclobutane [2], study of rates and mechanism of iron(III) monohydroxamate complexes [3]. The rate of iron(III) chelate formation is controlled by the release of first coordinated water molecule or by chelate ring closure as was found in the other reports [4,5] for some bivalent metal chelates containing a six-membered ring. Here, kinetic properties of bidentate hydroxamic acids were compared with those of the bidentate as well as monodentate ligands. Many other workers have also reported [6-8] the kinetics of formation of iron(III) complexes with similar ligands. A spectrophotometric study of the complex formation between iron(III) and SCA was reported by Ogawa and Tobe [9]. Several other reagents were used by different workers to determine iron(III) in different samples spectrophotometrically [10,11]. All these reported methods are not describing the procedures to determine iron in sample such as curry leaves and drumstick leaves and pharmaceuticals. Besides, the methods are either kinetic mechanistic reports or simple chelation investigations. Therefore, it is very essential to develop a new rapid and simple validated
